Proration is a billing practice that adjusts your charges based on the portion of a service period you actually used. Proration ensures that you're only billed for the actual time you've used the service during your initial month, and it helps to align your billing cycle with your future full-month usage. It's a common practice to ensure fair billing for partial months when customers sign up or make changes to their service mid-cycle.

In the scenario shown to the left, the customer signed up for internet service on October 19, 2023 and their first bill was issued on November 1. The total amount on the first bill will include both the prorated amount for October and the full monthly charge for November.

See a more detailed explanation below!

- October 19 to October 31 (prorated): Since they signed up on October 19 and the billing cycle starts on November 1, they only used the service for 13 days in October. To calculate the prorated charge for October, we divide the full monthly cost by 30 days and then multiply it by the number of days you used it in October (13 days). This will result in a partial charge for October.
- B November 1 to November 30 (regular monthly charge): They're charged the full monthly fee for November since the billing cycle for that month has already begun. In subsequent bills, you should only see this regular monthly charge because your billing cycle will align with the full month of service.
- Promotion(s):
  - The $20/mo credit was applied to November, plus an additional $8.39 prorated credit for October.
  - The eero free use credit fro $11.99 was applied to November, plus an additional $5.03 prorated credit for October.
